[A] I was very young when I first met Johnson. My parents had just moved into an interesting old house. I was home from boarding school for the spring holidays, and on Saturday night I was allowed to (21). At midnight, when I opened my bedroom door, I found myself face to face with Johnson. Uttering a long, low cry of misery, he passed right through me and disappeared out the window.

I was startled for the moment — I had never seen a ghost before — and I felt nervous about going to bed; but eventually I went to sleep.

In the morning I told my father (22) I had seen. “Oh, yes, that was old Johnson,” he answered. “Don’t be afraid of him. He lives here.” And then he told me the history of Johnson’s ghost.

[B] It seems that when Johnson was alive, he loved the daughter of a family who formerly lived in our house — a beautiful girl named Emily. Johnson was quite young then, and too (24) to marry the girl, so he kissed her good-bye and told her he would return as soon as he made his fortune.

Then he went off to find gold in Australia. Johnson finally made his money, but not in the goldfields. He became a robber, and he robbed every traveller he could find. Of course in those days travellers through the Australian bush were few and far between, so it took Johnson nearly twenty years to “make his fortune.” When at last he thought he had enough, he managed to escape the authorities and returned to claim his bride.⁽²⁵⁾

[C] He reached Emily’s house, only to find it silent and deserted. All that the people who lived nearby could tell him was that one foggy night

Emily and her family disappeared and nobody had seen or heard anything of them since.

Johnson sought his lost love all over the world, but he never found her; and after years of wasted effort, he returned to spend his last days in the house where he and Emily had passed so many happy hours.

[D] He lived all alone, wandering about the empty rooms, weeping and calling to his Emily to come back to him. And when the old fellow died, his ghost kept on weeping and calling out (although, as far as we know, he never shed a tear over his wicked deeds in Australia).

My father told me that Johnson's ghost was there when he and my mother first took the house. In fact, the agent had lowered the selling price because the place had a ghost.

[E] Well, we were continually running into Johnson about the house. At first we used to walk around him or stand aside to let him pass. But as we grew more accustomed to having the ghost around, there seemed no need to be so formal; and so we would just walk right through him.

Regardless of what he had done during his lifetime, Johnson as a ghost was gentle and harmless, and in the beginning we all felt sorry for him. But as time went on, my parents grew tired of him. You see, Johnson's ghost was full of (29). There was nothing cheerful or friendly about him. He would sit on the stairs and cry for hours at a time. And when we had a party, the ghost would come and sob outside the living room door. His presence put everyone in such low spirits that our parties were no longer much fun.

[F] "I'm getting sick of this," my father said one evening. (Johnson had just spoiled a good game of chess for him by moaning and groaning until my father couldn't tell the king from the *pawns.) "We'll have to get rid of him somehow."

*pawn 歩兵 (チェスで最も位の低い駒)

“Well,” my mother said, “you won’t see the last of him until he’s found Emily’s grave. That’s what he’s after. Find Emily’s grave for him, and he’ll stop there. That’s the only thing to do.”

[G] It seemed a splendid idea, but the trouble was nobody knew where to find Emily’s grave. My father suggested that we could show some other Emily’s grave to the old robber. But, as luck would have it, there wasn’t a single Emily buried anywhere around. In fact, you’ve probably never come across a county so completely lacking in Emilys as ours was.

[H] I felt sorry for the old ghost, so I offered my own suggestion. “Couldn’t we make up a grave for old Johnson?” I asked. “We could try it, anyway.”

“Excellent!” my father exclaimed. “We’ll do just that!”

The very next morning we had the workers in. They fixed up a little grave at the bottom of the garden with a stone over it bearing the following words:

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF EMILY
HER LAST WORDS WERE:
“TELL JOHNSON THAT I LOVE HIM.”

We led the ghost down there that very night, and — well — it was one of the saddest sights I’ve ever seen, the way Johnson took on at that gravestone.

Since then, Johnson’s ghost has never troubled us. He spends each night sobbing on the grave, and he seems quite content with the arrangement.

Oh yes! In case you want to visit him, his general hours are 10 P.M. to 4 A.M. — 10 to 2 on Saturdays.

Ann: Pink? (36) Why?

Jan: Oh, I've been thinking of changing my hair color for a long time.

Ann: But (37)

Jan: I like pink. It's my favorite color. And everyone says it suits me.
You told me I looked really good in my pink sweater, yourself.
Don't you remember?

Ann: But pink's not a good color for hair. (38)

Jan: That's what my mom says. But I think it'd be cute.

Ann: But you've been talking about getting a part-time job. Nobody would hire you if you had pink hair.

Jan: Do you really think so?

Ann: I really do.

Jan: Oh ... Well, I suppose it wouldn't have to be pink. I could dye my hair lavender.

Ann: Lavender! (39). Do you want to look like my grandmother?

Jan: But I really want a new look ... Maybe I should cut it all off.
That'd be cool!

Ann: It might feel cool, but it'd look terrible. Girls should have hair!

Jan: (40)
