[A] Early English colonists who landed on the east coast of America met Native Americans of different tribes who all spoke the language called Algonquin. Let's imagine what it would be like to be an Algonquin child at that time. We're going to spend a day with a ten-year-old boy named Little Thunder.

[B] When the morning sun hits Little Thunder, he is lying on a warm bearskin. He walks outside to see his father rubbing a red paste on his body.⁽²¹⁾ Little Thunder knows that his father has mixed mud with bear fat to make it. He watches his father cover his arms, chest, face, and legs, preparing for hunting. The paste will help (22) the mosquitoes away.

[C] Little Thunder sees his mother cooking breakfast over a fire. How good the food smells! Today he will eat a stew of corn and venison, the meat from the deer that his father and uncle brought home two days ago.

[D] As he eats his stew, Little Thunder admires the way his father's hair is shaved so that only a stripe of shiny black grows from the middle of his forehead to the back of his neck.⁽²³⁾ When Little Thunder turns sixteen, he will wear his hair as the men do and get a tattoo on his arm, just like his father's. It will hurt, but he will not let the pain show. He will proudly wear the sign of the wolf, showing that he is a man and a member of the Wolf Tribe.

[E] Each member of Little Thunder's family has work to do today. His father will (25a) hunting with other men. His mother and sister will (25b) the earth to plant corn. Later they will (25c) fresh roots to boil for dinner. Little Thunder will (25d) the morning outside the tall wooden fence that surrounds the village. He will check his traps to see (26) he has caught any squirrels or rabbits.

[F] As he leaves the village, he passes the home of an elderly man who lies close to death. Little Thunder hears the deep, slow voice of the village shaman, a medicine man, who is singing over the sick man and shaking a rattle. Little Thunder remembers how his mother gathered plants to help heal the sick man. Sometimes the plants help, but (27). Now the shaman sings to drive away the evil spirits that are making the old man so sick.

[G] A snake crosses Little Thunder's path — a sign of good luck, since the snake is the animal spirit that watches over Little Thunder. He is happy that the snake will protect him from harm. Little Thunder finds a rabbit in his trap and carries it home. At the edge of the forest, he meets his father, who is proud to see that his son is becoming a hunter.

[H] Something exciting is happening today in Little Thunder's village. The chief sachem, the highest and most respected leader among many Algonquin tribes, has come. Little Thunder hears men cheering in the village center. A game of stickball is being played. Two teams of young men run up and down the field, tossing and catching a ball with long-handled nets of woven leather strips. Little Thunder shouts when his favorite team wins.

[I] When the games are over, the chief sachem stands to speak. Everyone falls silent.

With a frown, the chief sachem announces, "We face the threat of war from another tribe. We must be strong. We must prepare." The men call out their support. Little Thunder sees his mother and knows from her sad eyes that she is worried.

[J] That night, Little Thunder and his tribe gather around the big campfire in the village center. The sound of the beating drums fills Little Thunder with excitement, but he is worried, too. Little Thunder has heard the adults say that since the white man has arrived, the Algonquins are suffering from diseases that they never knew before. The shaman cannot always frighten away these evil spirits. With so many of his people dying of disease, Little Thunder wishes that they would not fight other tribes. He wishes instead that the leaders would sit together, find ways to agree, and pass around the peace pipe.

[K] The drum beats louder than ever as the chief sachem calls men to the war dance. A man of the village sings about the brave deeds of their ancestors. Shadows from the campfire move across his face. He raises his arms like bird wings, pointing to the sky. More men join the dance. Caught up in the excitement of the drums, the dancing, and the singing, Little Thunder is (33).

Meg: Really? Camping? Are you sure you want to do that?

Mai: Why? (36)

Meg: Well, I went on a camping trip with my parents when I was a teenager and it was horrible!

Mai: Oh, really? Tell me about it.

Meg: My father likes to drive, you know. So, he wanted to rent a camper and drive all around Lake Superior, camping on the way.

Mai: That sounds like fun! (37) I've heard that there's a lot of natural beauty in Canada.

Meg: Well, yeah, I suppose the scenery is nice there, usually, but it rained every day!

Mai: (38)

Meg: And it was so cold and muddy, especially when we had to set up camp!

Mai: Set up camp? I thought you said you rented a camper.

Meg: Well, not exactly. It was like a truck, with a room on the back with beds. We had to set up a camping stove outside for cooking, and use the toilet and showers at the campground.

Mai: So, you didn't enjoy it?

Meg: Not at all! I like my home comforts: my TV, my hair dryer, eating in a nice warm room...

Mai: But even if you didn't like camping, you enjoyed yourself during the day, didn't you?

Meg: Not really. I mean, all we did was drive all day, most days. So, there I was sitting by the window, looking out at the side of the road...

Mai: So, you wouldn't go back to Canada, then?

Meg: (40) In fact, I'm thinking of going to Vancouver on vacation. But I'm staying in a nice hotel!
